Before the flood: Misperception of flood risk in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta	Jessica Jennette Ludy		"The goal of this thesis is to answer that very question, "(how) Do residents living behind levees perceive their risk of flooding?" Through a survey, this research elicited resident's perceptions and factors influencing their perceptions. The results clearly showed that residents were not aware of the true risks of living behind a levee. This thesis assessed the flood risk perception of one sub-sea-level neighborhood in the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta in California, results likely applicable more broadly, recognizing the continued urbanization (and re-urbanization) of flood-prone areas across the country. Sacramento Southern Railroad	Kevin Hecteman	Transportation/Communities	The Sacramento Southern Railroad was born into a famous railroad family and a busy railroad town in July 1903. The mighty Southern Pacific, which controlled the new line from the outset, built south from Sacramento along the eastern bank of the Sacramento River into the delta's rich farmland area. At its zenith, the line was about 31 miles long, serving the communities of Freeport, Hood, Locke, Walnut Grove, and Isleton. Trains on what became known as the Walnut Grove Branch hauled pears, sugar beets, asparagus and other products from the agricultural region's packing sheds and canneries. Competition from trucking and damage from flooding took a severe toll on the railroad, and the Southern Pacific largely abandoned it by 1978, but a portion lives on as a labor of love. San Joaquin Delta Land Reclamation Photographs	Charles A. Bishop	Reclamation	The San Joaquin Delta collection contains 97 photographic prints taken primarily by Charles A. Bishop circa 1904-1907 documenting various aspects of the reclamation, irrigation, and cultivation processes undertaken in the Middle River area of the San Joaquin Valley. Activities featured in the collection include dredging, pumping, transport by barge of freight and heavy field machinery, field cultivation and harvesting. The collection includes photographs of the Santa Fe Railroad depot area of Middle River; various waterways, canals, marshlands and fields of the vicinity; local residences; immigrant farm laborers; and samples of the yield from the farms. Also included are two photographs of Charles A. Bishop and a reproduction of a magazine article extolling the successes of the land reclamation efforts in the San Joaquin Valley.
